AR COULD BE A CORE TECHNOLOGY

"I regard it as a big idea like the smartphone I think AR is that big, it's huge. I get excited because of the things that could be done that could improve a lot of lives. And be entertaining. I view AR like I view the silicon here in my iPhone, it's not a product per se, it's a core technology. But there are things to discover before that technology is good enough for the mainstream."

The image shows the Adobe Aero website homepage. At the top, there is a navigation bar with the Adobe logo, a hamburger menu icon, and links for "ADOBE AERO", "Learn & Support", "System Requirements", and a blue "Download for iOS" button. The main content area features a large background image of a hand holding a tablet displaying a 3D model of blueberries. Overlaid on this is the Adobe Aero logo (a green square with "Ar" in white) and the headline "Augmented reality. Now a reality." in bold white text. Below the headline, it says "Introducing Adobe Aero, the most intuitive way to view, build, and share immersive and interactive AR experiences." There is a "Download on the App Store" button and a note "Free on iOS for phones and tablets." at the bottom. A white chevron icon points downwards at the very bottom.

Major question for this concept: how does it mesh with its surroundings? It's a big departure from the current look and feel of the park. I love the design and I'm comfortable presenting something challenging, but let's be thoughtful about its proposed placement.

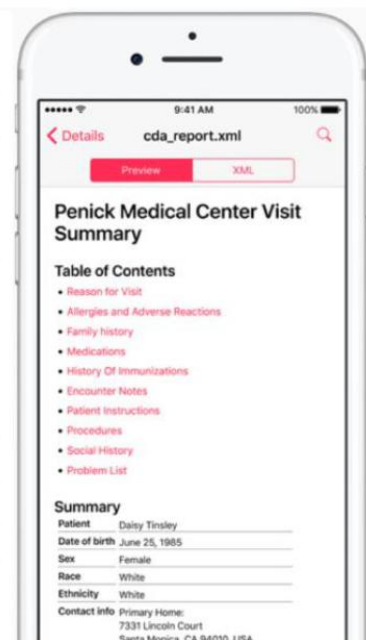

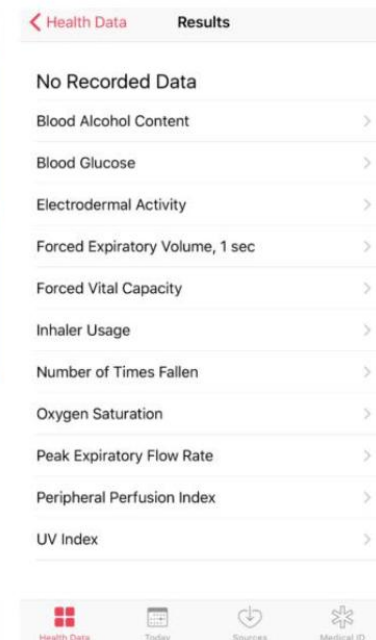

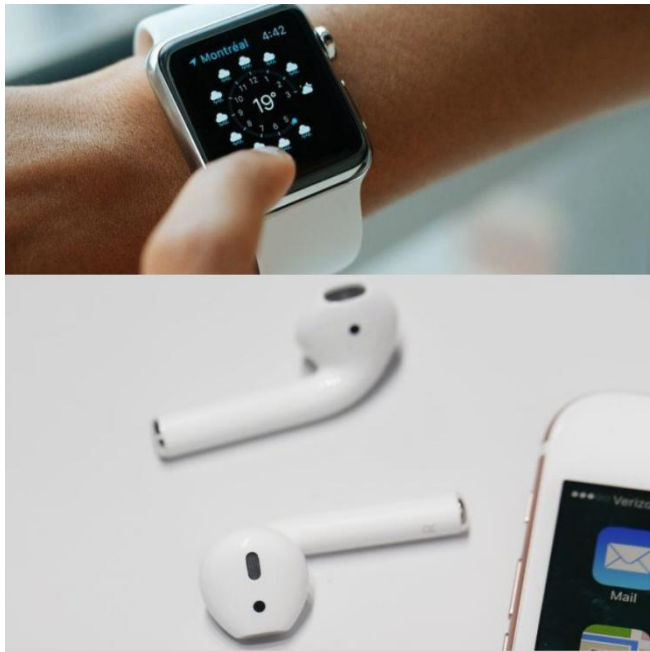

For the elevated, sloped benches, let's make sure to spend time thinking about sight lines and getting a feel for how it will feel to sit on these benches at different times of day. Where does one get the clearest view of the sunset? Where would you sit if you wanted to watch the sunset from the park?
